

use others moral values

When trying to persuade someone, use his/her moral values as a frame for the points you are trying to make. E.g. if someone is conservative, use purity, patriotism, loyalty or respect for authority.

create view of oneself by assigning a role

How make people vote: bad: you ought to vote / go vote / you should vote good: you are someone who votes / you are a voter plans

people are more likely to carry through with an action if they made a plan when, where and how they do it Example: voting campaign letters associations

people associate the messenger with the message good message \Rightarrow they like messenger bad message \Rightarrow they dislike messenger

Examples: persian messenger / weatherman deal \leftrightarrow dealer always separate a deal from its dealer

Examples: cardealer / waiter disgust=conservative people who are disgusted are more conservative conservative people are easier disgusted people mimic/like alike people look for others they can identify with and copy their behaviour child lost fear of water when it saw another child swim

Example: child learns from other children write->live up to if someone has written evidence of your views you are more likely to stick to them (consistency)

Example: chinese prisoners of war small compliance->view of oneself small actions make people see themselves in a certain role, which they want to stick with (consistency)

Example: Donations

authority

people stop thinking for themselves when a (even false) authority gives orders

Example: electric shock button facts->command

one can hide a command after a series of facts to give people suggestions / commands

Example: politicians

(recent) scarcity+competition fear of losing something is greater than the outlook of winning something

Example: cookies

pain->commitment

the more pain one endured, the fonder they become Example: fraternity hell week gift>like a gift is a greater compliance than sympathy

Example: ask favour, give a gift coop->friends

boys camp because if you pretend to give a reason, people will agree more

Example: copy first exploit exploiters

they deserve it comparison

3 choices, 2 very similar but one of them a bit better, people will take the better over the 3rd

Examples: vacation targets / slightly uglier lookalike
